Mrs. Hucks Is Sentenced To Jail Term

Sally Hucks, former chief telephone operator at the Woodner Hotel, was sentenced to serve from 20 months to five years in jail for perjury and conspiracy to obstruct a Senate investigation of the Teamsters Union.

The sentence was handed down by District Court Judge Edward A. Tamm. Mrs. Hucks' six-weeks trial ended in her conviction on April, 15.

She had been charged with conspiring to obstruct the Senate Labor Rackets Committee investigation of the Teamsters Union. She also was charged with lying to the committee in April, 1959, when she said that she did not own a mink coat.

She had also been accused of attempting to influence witnesses who testified before a grand jury which handed down the indictment against her.

Judge Tamm today continued to an unsettled date the sentencing of a co-defendant in the case, Moss Herman, a New York Teamster, who had been convicted of the conspiracy count and of one count of obstructing the committee investigation of the Teamsters and its president, James R. Hoffa.
